Superior Search Functions

Find relevant information by searching or browsing for content by title, subject area, favorites, most-cited articles, most-read articles and taxonomy.

PDF Reference Linking

Dynamic PDFs contain hyper-links which allow users to cross-reference citations to the original sources.

Finding Content By Recommendation

This feature uses collaborative filtering technology to identify similar interests among users. This allows tailored article recommendations based on articles other readers have reviewed and research history.

Create Your Own Library

Registered users can build their own library shelves on the site by adding articles and journals to their "Favorites" area.

Recommend to a Librarian

Users can email librarians possible additions to university e-collections.

Email Alerts

Alerts allow users to be notified of key developments in their field as the content becomes available.

Citation Manager

Users can download article references from the abstract page or table of contents to several citation management systems.

What Thought Leaders Are Saying About Institutional Investor Journals

"The Journal of Derivatives is a highly respected outlet for publication in a wide range of topics relevant for derivative pricing and risk management. The authors are predominantly academics and the articles are all peer reviewed. I find it an important outlet for my research and find many useful articles published there."

— Robert Engle, Stern School of Business, New York University
Nobel Prize in Economics 2003

"Private equity is an opaque field, with both limited and general partners facing challenging information problems. The Journal of Private Equity helps address this issue, by serving as a bridge between academic research and practitioner concerns."

— Josh Lerner, Jacob H. Schiff Professor of Investment Banking,
Harvard Business School and JPE advisory board member
