

Walker Wins Scott Prize

A first-year man wins the Scott Paper Company Foundation award for his leadership of the Afro-American Student Union.

Grover P. Walker of Los Angeles, California, a 29-year-old student in the first year of the MBA Program, has been voted the 1969-70 winner of the Scott Paper Company Foundation Award for Leadership. This annual honor recognizes superior leadership capability as evidenced by outstanding contributions to the life of the Business School by a first-year student. The recipient is awarded a $1,500 prize.

In May each year, representatives of the Scott Paper Company Foundation customarily come to the School to meet the recipient of the award and the selection committee. The award check is usually presented at that time. There is also an opportunity for Foundation personnel to visit with HBS officials to discuss the future of the awards program as it affects the School.

Mr. Walker, a native of Chicago, is co-chairman of the School's Afro-American Student Union. He has had a major part in the development of that organization. Discussions by selection committee members focused on the way in which Mr. Walker had assumed leadership of the Afro-American Student Union, the evident growth within AASU of an administrative structure for dealing with problem areas, and the central role he had played as a spokesman for the group. According to Dean Lawrence E. Fouraker, "He has dealt with relevant issues constructively; and this leadership, coupled with high scholastic achievement, led to his election by a Faculty-student committee."
